Jay Z took message as arrogant, being given the publicity it could generate for the champagne house.

The marketing position was as the French, became too "identity" and misjudged by the owner of that was owned by the company Cristal brand "Armand Brignac"[?].

A boycott that pays, since Jay Z launched and spilled champagne afloat with its new exorbitant price of $ 760 the bottle. At that price the customer buys "Jay Z" brand more than the same brand itself. As for the quality even champagne, it does not really target the connoisseurs of champagne, but at most amateurs, impressed by flashy packaging and shock-like chic and luxurious ... This excess of gilding is not necessary, otherwise knowing that the champagnes are by definition offered in a luxury bottled container. It seems that the champagne is not good menage with hip hop and rap clips. Jay Z pushes by his ego has not only wanted to prove it was possible to drink costly champagne by music fans African American, and in addition they have the means to afford a dizzying prices. Although Cattier, the Honourable producer, owns the vineyard since 1763, the history of this brand is more a case of marketing school of winemaking tradition.

The vintage "Ace of Spades" (Ace of Spades) Armand de Brignac was born in 2006 following a dispute between Jay Z and Louis Roederer, who was previously the favorite champagne of the rapper. One of the brand's leaders had made the mistake spill into the Economist magazine about the reasons for the success of Louis Roederer in the rap. "What can I do?", He replied. We can not stop people from buying it. I'm sure Dom Perignon or Krug would be delighted to have this clientele. "

But some packages (Courrèges designed the bottle, gold-plated, set with an ace of spades) and promotion without moderation (the bottle known as Jay Z appears in the clips, including "Show Me What You Got") contributed to the success of the old brand. Their choice was Cattier, which has a registered neglected since the 1950s: Armand de Brignac. Source: Forbes, Bloomberg
